- 1. Security teams want less and not more tools
- 2. There are way more vendors than the size of the market can support the size of the market
- 3. The venture market has changed and many startups will run out of cash in 2023
- 4. The global economic climate means security budgets are being frozen and in many cases declining

Across the tech industry, at firms like Twitter, Meta, Coinbase and Snap, workers have appeared they are "seeking new opportunities".

Worldwide more than 120,000 jobs have been lost, according to the Layoffs.fyi vebsite, which tracks tech job cuts.

Different firms cut employees for different reasons but there are common themes.

As our lives moved online during the pandemic, the tech giants' businesses boomed, and executives believed the good times - for them - would continue
